Rhead Group Sets Gold Standard in Health & Safety Yet Again

Following extensive scrutiny the Warwickshire based Rhead Group has been recognised for the second year running by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents (RoSPA), with its prestigious Gold Award for outstanding delivery and commitment to occupational health and safety.

The Gold Award acknowledges the Rhead Group has attained a specific level of occupational health and safety performance at which employees are determined to be less likely to become injured whilst at work and less likely to become ill in the long term as a result of the work that they do.

To achieve this accolade the Rhead Group had to demonstrate that it has a fully functioning and implemented safety management system which has full senior management support and commitment. The system and processes involved have to be adhered to throughout the running of onsite client projects and within the company's office bases. The safety management system has to be further supported by documented and auditable evidence to demonstrate the approach is part of normal operational routine.

Speaking of the award, Peter Nicholas, Head of Health & Safety at the Rhead Group, said: "This has been a real team effort and is a great achievement for us. RoSPA's standards are the most exacting and this Award confirms that our approach and level of commitment is valued at the highest professional levels. This is very reassuring for our clients as it demonstrates we are continually striving to improve all our practices to safeguard the health and well being of all."
