Rhead Group Wins Gold

Following exhaustive scrutiny, the Warwickshire based Rhead Group has been recognised with a Gold Award by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents (RoSPA) for delivery and commitment to Occupational Health and Safety.

The Gold Award demonstrates that the Rhead Group has attained a specific level of occupational Health & Safety performance at which employees are less likely to become injured whilst at work and less likely to become ill in the long term as a result of the work that they do.

To achieve the award the Rhead Group had to demonstrate that it has a fully functioning and implemented safety management system which is fully supported by senior management commitment. The system and processes have to be adhered to throughout the running of client projects onsite and within the company's office bases. The demonstration has to be further supported by documented and auditable evidence to show the approach is part of normal operational routine.

Speaking of the award, Peter Nicholas, Head of Health & Safety at the Rhead Group, commented, "This has been a real team effort and is a great achievement for us. The Rhead Group has always been highly committed to health and safety matters. RoSPA's standards are the most challenging and this award confirms that our approach and commitment to safety is correct. This is important from a client perspective as it is yet further evidence of how, as a company, we are striving to continually improve and better ourselves regardless of all of our previous achievements".
